37 C.F.R. 1.132 DECLARATION

Mail Stop Amendment
Commissioner for Patents
P.O. Box 1450
Alexandria, VA 22313-1450

I, Dana Ohl, M.D., declare as follows:

1. I am a colleague of Drs Brackett and Lynne (hereinafter "the Applicants"). I am very familiar with the work of the one of the named inventors and am familiar with patent application No. 10/748,637 entitled "INCREASING SPERM MOTILITY" (hereafter the '637 application) and the subject matter described therein.

2. I hold an M.D. degree and am presently employed as Professor of Urology, Department of Urology, at the University of Michigan. As detailed in the attached Curriculum Vitae, I have significant expertise in the field of urology, and particularly in the field discussed in the patent, that of infertility in spinal cord injured men. I am the director of the spinal cord fertility program at the University of Michigan.

3. I have authored 97 scientific articles and book chapters, with the vast majority of those related to sexual dysfunction and infertility, particularly in spinal cord injured males (please see attached CV).

4. I have reviewed the Office Action dated November 29, 2006 and references cited therein. I have been asked by patent counsel Zachariades to provide an explanation based on the claimed invention showing that the subject matter of the claims differs from the cited art. Independent claim 1 is copied below.

Claim 1. A method of increasing motility of sperm, the method comprising the steps of:

a) providing from a subject a biological sample comprising sperm and at least one cytokine; and

b) contacting the biological sample with an agent that inactivates or reduces the biological activity of the at least one cytokine selected from the group consisting of TNF $\alpha$ , IL1 $\beta$ , and IL6.

5. I will briefly discuss the '637 application for which the Office Action has been issued.

The invention is directed, in part, to method of increasing motility of sperm, by providing from a subject a biological sample comprising sperm and at least one cytokine; and contacting the biological sample, in-vitro, with an agent that inactivates or reduces the biological activity of the at least one cytokine selected from the group consisting of TNF $\alpha$ , IL1 $\beta$ , and IL6, with the hope that such intervention will result in an improved sperm specimen that will increase the likelihood that fertility will improve.

6. I respectfully disagree with the Examiner's assertions that either Alexander et al. (US 6,180,355 B1); Gruschwitz et al. (Journal of Andrology 1996); Angelopoulos et al. (Fertility and Sterility 1999); Basu et al. (Journal of Andrology 2002); Brackett et al. (Physical Therapy 1996) or Gerris (European Society of Human Reproduction and Embryology 1999) teach or disclose the instant invention either when these references taken alone or in combination.

7. The Alexander et al. (US 6,180,355 B1) reference describes the use of cytokines found in the seminal plasma as indicators or confirmatory indicators of CPPS (Chronic Pelvic Pain Syndrome) or syndromes like CPPS such as chronic abacterial prostatitis. The cytokines in this disease state are diagnostic markers rather than symptom or pathology causing elements. There is no mention of use for assessing or treating sperm motility. Although Alexander showed that by treating the disease state systemically with various agents, the symptoms of the CPPS are helped and the levels and marker cytokines in the seminal plasma are reduced, the treatment possibilities outlined in the patent are vastly different than the application of Brackett. Alexander discusses systemic therapy, which is the only possible way to help CPPS patients. For infertility purposes, the in-vitro treatment of biological specimens is essential, as this allows great leeway in dosages for treatment, and completely avoids toxicity that may be associated with systemic treatments. Furthermore, the Alexander patent and the current application are addressing two completely different clinical entities. In my reading of the patent, Alexander never mentions sperm motility. Therefore, I do not find the information in this patent to obviously lead to the instant invention which identifies cytokines in seminal plasma as a cause of low sperm motility and which shows that treating these cytokines in vitro can improve sperm motility.

8. Gruschwitz et al (Journal of Andrology 1996) describes an association between genitourinary tract infections, elevated semen cytokines, and sperm motility. The authors of the Gruschwitz paper are among many authors who have studied cytokines in the seminal plasma. The different studies have found different results. The Examiner has confused correlation with causation. Correlation does not imply causation, and this well-known scientific trap is not an indication of obviousness to the scientist. Simply put, the co-existence of elevated cytokines with low sperm motility does not mean the cytokines caused the low sperm motility. The Gruschwitz paper does not lead one skilled in the art to the instant invention. I would suggest to the reviewers, that if it was obvious to one skilled in the art that this application should follow the paper of Gruschwitz, et al, some such person should have brought forward this application in the 10 years since the paper was published. However, no such application has been suggested, until the current application. The Applicants addressed the causative role of cytokines in the seminal plasma by showing that neutralizing these cytokines improved sperm motility in their group of subjects.

9. Angelopoulos et al (Fertility and Sterility 1999) describes different techniques of culturing testicular tissue and the subsequent effects on sperm motility. One reasonably skilled in the art would recognize that it is a normal phenomenon (i.e., a physiologic event) to observe few motile sperm in harvested testicular tissue. In-vitro tissue culture may improve the motility of sperm retrieved from harvested testicular tissue. The findings of the Angelopoulos paper do not obviously lead to the conclusion that, in a pathologic state, cytokines in the seminal plasma cause poor motility in sperm or that treating these cytokines in vitro will improve sperm motility.

10. The study by Basu et al (Journal of Andrology 2002) characterized white blood cell populations in the seminal plasma of men with spinal cord injury. The discussion section of this paper speculates on a variety of substances, including cytokines, which may impair sperm motility in men with spinal cord injury. One skilled in the art would not automatically assume from this paper that manipulation of cytokines would lead to improved sperm motility in men with spinal cord injury any more than manipulation of several hundred other semen-related substances known to affect human sperm motility.

11. Similar to the argument in item 10 (above), the Brackett et al (Physical Therapy 1996) paper is a review paper that speculates on a variety of factors that may contribute to low sperm motility in men with spinal cord injury. Semen-related factors are discussed in a general sense, along with a variety of other factors including hormone abnormalities, infrequency of ejaculation, bladder infections, scrotal temperature, etc. Cytokines are not discussed whatsoever in this paper. As in item 10, one skilled in the art would not automatically assume from this paper that manipulation of semen cytokines in men with spinal cord injury would lead to improved sperm motility.

12. Gerris (European Society of Human Reproduction and Embryology 1999), in a review article, reminds us that sperm deposited in the vagina during intercourse may not be available for other use. Sperm retrieved from the vagina have limited application, and there is no evidence that these sperm are a good alternative to sperm produced during masturbation. In fact, the vagina offers a hostile environment to sperm, i.e., the normal vaginal pH is acidic and provides an unhealthy environment to sperm. Because the cytokines being treated interact with the sperm in the seminal plasma, there seems to be no more obviousness to retrieving sperm from the vagina for in-vitro treatment than retrieving sperm from a specimen cup or a condom designed for sperm retrieval.

13. I further state that all statements made herein are of my own knowledge are true and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true; and further that these statements were made with my knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, under §1001 of Title 18 of the United States Code, and that such willful false statements may jeopardize the validity of the application or any patent issued thereon.
